

Marc Cain

The internationally successful fashion company Marc Cain was founded in 1973 by Helmut Schlotterer, Chairman of the Management Board. Today, Marc Cain is a globally operating premium brand for women's fashion with its own share of production in Germany. Marc Cain manages its worldwide business from its headquarters in Bodelshausen. Helmut Schlotterer continues to lead the company as Chairman of the Management Board. This makes Marc Cain one of the few fashion companies in Germany that is still run by its owner.

The company now employs over 860 people in Germany alone. 127 Marc Cain Stores in 30 countries, 334 Shop-in-Stores, 226 depot customers, 6 Marc Cain outlets and a further 684 upmarket specialist shops in 51 countries characterise the selective distribution strategy. The Marc Cain export quota is over 60%.

Production

Marc Cain focuses on research and development. Continual innovation is the basic prerequisite for being able to exist in Germany with the company's own production facilities. Marc Cain's speciality is that 64% of its knitwear is knitted at its headquarters in Bodelshausen. The yarns are knitted on state-of-the-art knitting machines and the textile processes take place in Germany in order to produce the quality and comfort that Marc Cain is known for.

Marc Cain was already a pioneer in the seventies with the first electronically controlled knitting machines.

In the ultra-modern knitting park, the heart of Marc Cain production at the company's German headquarters, 119 knitting machines are currently in use, 112 of which are flat knitting machines and 7 circular knitting machines specifically for the production of clothing fabrics. With its „3-D Knit & Wear technology“, Marc Cain is able to produce a garment in just one operation, i.e. a completely finished knitted Collection item, that has no seams, comes out of the machine, in one go.

In addition to the knitting facilities, Marc Cain also has its own finishing, printing, sewing and twisting park and an in-house laboratory in Germany. The garments are finished in the finishing department. Each piece is handled up to 90 times. The aim is not only to create special visual and tactile effects, but also to optimise the quality and material properties. Brilliant and colour-intensive prints are used in the print shop, which are characteristic of the unique Marc Cain style. Marc Cain's characteristic yarn creations, which give the knitwear highlights their special feel, are produced in the twisting department. Every material is put to the test in the in-house laboratory. A process that takes 31,000 test steps per season.

Since the foundation of Marc Cain in Italy, the company has cultivated its Italian origins with German perfection. The highest demands on design, quality, materials, the latest processing techniques and fits are Marc Cain's credo. That's why most of the fabrics, jerseys and knitting yarns come from Europe, the majority from Italy.

Sustainability

Marc Cain is aware of its responsibility along the supply chain. The brand therefore works continuously to make the processes within the company and with its partners more socially responsible and environmentally conscious. A holistic approach is a matter of course at all times and forms the basis of all actions. From the selection of materials and innovation in production processes to regular exchanges with stakeholders.

The production (tailoring) of Marc Cain clothing is a predominantly European process. Production takes place primarily where the garments are sold. This ensures short and fast transport routes. Marc Cain maintains long-term and respectful business relationships with its suppliers, with an average partnership of over 12 years.

In addition, Marc Cain is committed to the amfori BSCI Code of Conduct, integrates it into its own code of conduct for its supply chain and has set itself the goal of checking all operations for compliance with it using independent monitoring systems. Further information at: amfori.org
